

My parents are native Chicagoans who trace their parentage to Eastern European Jews. I was the first child. Under guidance of parents and pediatrician, there was nothing unusual about my early years. By age six, I had two younger brothers and this completed the family.

I attended grammar school in Chicago, and during this time, also acquired a musical education. In High School (Roosevelt) I played in the band and orchestra, became captain of the ROTC band, participated in the debate club and the school paper, and held various offices in student government.

After graduation I spent a year studying the unsurpassable University of Chicago survey courses until being drafted into the Navy. Here I was trained as a Pharmacist's Mate and spent most of my tour of duty at Great Lakes. It was then that I decided on medicine.

My father died unexpectedly shortly before I was discharged. This placed a great strain on family finances, but my GI benefits plus earnings after school hours and in vacation time plus generous scholarship aid saw me successfully through school.

My last vacation was spent at the Will County Health Department (L.L. Fatheree, health officer) where I learned a lot about medical (and general) ethics.

This brings me to the present. My present plan is to serve a rotating internship followed by a residency either in Pediatrics or Internal Medicine. At present, my politics run along liberal lines; my religion is a free-thinking Judaism; tennis is my favorite sport; musical tastes incline toward the classics; I read the Daily News on weekdays and the Trib on Sundays; periodicals include the New Yorker, and George Seldes' In Fact, and The New Yorker Magazine Monthly!

I will be glad to meet any member of your Interns' Committee if you will suggest a convenient time.

How about the
